[1] We all know that the cell phone is one of the cheapest means of communication. We can communicate with our beloved ones, relatives, or any person all around the globe by sending a text message or by making a call.

[2] One important use of the cell phone is to send text messages. It is an easy way to communicate. We simply type the message, send it, and, in just a few seconds, it will reach another person in any place around the globe. Moreover, with the cell phone, we can send money, check internet emails, or even watch the news on TV stations.

[3] Technology certainly plays an important role in our daily life but too much use of cell phones may be harmful. According to some studies, we are exposed to electromagnetic radiation when we use cell phones. This radiation can cause biological transformations in the human body affecting the brain tissues and causing hair loss, skin reddening, memory loss, brain cancer, and sometimes death. Many researchers warn people against the use of cell phones because they think it causes brain cancer. Yet, there is no scientific evidence so far!

[4] A group of researchers in Europe are trying to determine the risks of using cell phones through a big project called Cosmos. They are studying the effect of mobile phones on users' health. Professor Lawrie Challis, a member of that group, says: "the study is crucial, and we still do not know if the use of mobile phones causes cancer or not. He also remarks that "the balance of evidence suggests that it does not, but we need to be sure."

[5] Dr. Mireille Toledano, another investigator in the same project, suggests that "the best thing we can do now is to observe the health of a large number of users over a long period of time to see if, in the long term, there are any links between cell phone use and cancer." The project will last for more than 20 years and will involve 250,000 phone users across five different European countries.

[6] In any case, the excessive use of cell phones may be too risky. Cell phones should be used for emergencies and not for long conversations. We need to be cautious; "prevention is better than cure" as the proverb goes.

Model answers (any appropriate answer is accepted)

Writing: An English friend of yours has decided to live in Morocco, and he/she needs your help to choose a city or town. Write an email to your friend to explain why the city or town you suggest is good for him/her to live in. (Approximately 200 words): Subject: The best city for you Dear Emma, I was so happy to hear that you want to live in Morocco! I think Agadir is the perfect city for you. Agadir is in the south-west of Morocco, on the Atlantic coast, so you can enjoy beautiful beaches and sunny weather almost all year round. The winters are mild and the summers are not too hot. The people are friendly and welcoming, and they will help you feel at home. You will also discover Amazigh customs, music and delicious food such as tagine and fresh fish. There are many interesting places to visit, such as the old Kasbah on the hill and the Souss-Massa National Park. The economy is based on tourism, fishing and agriculture, so it is easy to find work. Moreover, the city has modern facilities: good hospitals, libraries, shopping centers, schools and an international airport. I am sure you will love it. Please write back and tell me what you think. Best wishes, Salma
