[1] The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) developed a new programme called "Line Up, Live Up". The aim is to engage children and youth from marginalized areas in sport-based activities and essential life skills in order to protect them from crime, violence and drug use.

[2] Through the programme, sports coaches and teachers can teach children valuable life skills, such as resisting social pressures to engage in delinquency, dealing with stress and communicating effectively with friends. Girls and boys take part in various fun games, physical activities and discussion sessions and sharing experiences. The course consists of 10 sessions of 1 hour each over several weeks.

[3] The training programme was first piloted in Brazil in 2017 and will be implemented in a number of countries across the world, including Africa, Central Asia, the Middle East and South America. The programme has already trained some 150 coaches and trainers in Brazil, Kyrgyzstan and South Africa. The trainers have trained nearly 1,000 youngsters. The training programme, already available in different languages, is in the process of being extended to many other countries.

[4] In Latin America, which is officially rated as the most violent region in the world, many programmes have been successfully implemented in areas where thousands of young people are affected by crime or armed conflicts. In La Esperanza in El Salvador, the local football team was reinforced, and a new field was built. It has become a safe place where local children can learn the values of sports and respect. "Previously, this neighborhood was one of the most dangerous, but thanks to the work with young people, we have managed to reduce delinquency by nearly 90%," says Carlos Gómez, coordinator of the football school in La Esperanza.

[5] In Colombia, where the armed conflict has killed more than 200,000 people in 60 years, the "Soccer with a Heart" initiative has helped over 2,000 children from poor communities and those at risk of violence. The initiative assists them to have access to new opportunities and to develop skills to confront difficulty and co-exist in peace.

[6] Over the last year, demonstrations of the "Line Up, Live Up" programme have been made to a variety of audiences including policymakers in different countries and participants in sports tournaments in South Africa and Kyrgyzstan. In addition, UNODC arranged sports events and roundtable discussions on peace building with sports experts and young people in many countries all over the world.

Model answers (any appropriate answer is accepted)

Task 1: There are many things we can do to be good citizens. For example, we can respect the law and the rules of our school and our country. Besides, we can keep our streets and public places clean. Furthermore, we can help people in need and take part in voluntary work. Finally, we should vote and take part in the life of our community.

Task 2: Dear Linda, I hope you are well. Last month, I attended my cousin's wedding in a big hall in Fez. About 300 guests came, and everybody wore traditional clothes: the bride changed into several beautiful caftans, and the men wore djellabas. The ceremony started in the evening with Andalusian music, and the guests danced until midnight. We ate a delicious dinner of lamb with prunes, and the guests offered gifts to the couple. According to our tradition, the bride sat on a special chair called "amariya". It was a wonderful night. I will send you the photos soon. Best wishes,
Nadia
